

Concurrent Session 4-B

Barriers to treating hypertension and recognizing potential risk for cardiovascular disease among Haitians: An integrative review

Diana-Lyn Baptiste, DNP, RN is an Assistant Professor at the Johns Hopkins University School of Nursing who specializes in cardiovascular health care and prevention in underserved populations. She has focused on translating evidence-based practice to improve self-care behaviors among adults living with heart failure. Fluent in Haitian Creole, Dr. Baptiste has many years of experience working in Haiti and has an interest in exploring health beliefs and practices among Haitians. She is currently serving as the President of the Nu Beta chapter for the Sigma Theta Tau International Honor Society and is dedicated to promoting diversity and inclusion.

No handouts provided for this presentation.
